Flooding in Bangkok, Thailand

Due to the many concerned emails we received over the last couple of days, we decided to publish this short newsletter about the flooding situation in Thailand.

Luckily, none of our projects were affected by the recent and still ongoing flooding. However, the prolonged rainy season, heavier than usual downpour and onslaught of typhoons in the region, might delay the construction of some of our projects.

Unfortunately, the majority of our university scholars in Bangkok were negatively affected by the flooding and the temporary closure of their universities in the capital. The affected scholars have since been evacuated to other parts of Thailand. While some of our university scholars are already volunteering to help in this crisis, we also have plans to engage some of our evacuated students in our school projects in the north of Thailand until the universities in Bangkok reopen again.

Both our offices in Chiang Mai and Siem Reap remained unaffected and in full operation.
